How It Feels to Be Colored Me, by Zora Neale Hurston

And you feel as though anything in the world could be better than this. Even death. You may even pray that you could choose death instead. Unfortunately, you couldn't, and every second that passed felt like an hour, excruciating hour by excruciating hour. When it's over, when your body is freed, you feel foreign in your own skin.

Crucially, she feels that she loses her identity as “Zora” and her former charmed childhood. Instead, she’s stamped as one example of a larger category, which comes with a loss of the privileges she had in Eatonville. By postponing a racial awareness until a move in her thirteenth year, Hurston seems to say that race is a function of ...
