Confidence in a nutshell. When people are confident in the economy, they feel secure in their jobs, spend more, and take bigger risks. In the same vein, when people lack confidence in the economy, they decide to spend less, save more, and hold their wallets closer. Confidence is such a driving force in the economy that the media often reports on it—you can watch confidence rise and fall weekly thanks to Gallup Poll's U.S. Economic Confidence Index, which is based off of asking Americans ...
