Ithell Colquhoun (9 October 1906 – 11 April 1988) was a British painter, occultist, poet and author. Stylistically her artwork was affiliated with surrealism. In the late 1930s, Colquhoun was part of the British Surrealist Group before being expelled because she refused to renounce her association with occult groups. Colquhoun was born in Shillong, Eastern Bengal and Assam, British India, but ...

Composed almost entirely of material assembled from the author's dreams, I Saw Water challenges such fundamental distinctions as those between sleeping and waking, the two separated genders, and life and death. It is set in a convent on the Island of the Dead, but its spiritual context derives from sources as varied as Roman Catholicism, the teachings of the Theosophical Society, Goddess spirituality, Druidism, the mystical Qabalah, and Neoplatonism.

If we take a step back and look at this from a psychological perspective, the water is the unconscious and in it, always lurks the Kappa. A demon that can suck out our shirikodama, which is in some way a piece of materialized psychic energy, as an offering to the Great Water Dragon - an offering to the Great Mother archetype for those not careful enough in their exploration of the unconscious.

Science does not know why water clusters in this way, any more than it knows why galaxies cluster in the way they do, but occult science does, and the answer is intelligence. Now, this does not mean that your martini is a thinking entity, but it does mean that water has the ability to respond intelligently to the forces acting upon it and the changing conditions it encounters.
