Jean Baudrillard Two Essays. Translated by Arthur B. Evans. 1. Simulacra and Science Fiction. There are three orders of simulacra: (1) natural, naturalistic simulacra: based on image, imitation, and counterfeiting. They are harmonious, optimistic, and aim at the reconstitution, or the ideal institution, of a nature in God's image.

In Baudrillard's Simulacra and Simulations from 1981, he interrogates the relationships among reality, symbols, and society. " Simulacra are copies that depict things that either had no reality to begin with, or that no longer have an original. S Simulation is the imitation of the operation of a real-world process or system over time.

Jean Baudrillard (1929-2007), sociologist, philosopher, and the author of over thirty books, is best known for his theories of simulacra and hyperreality. According to Baudrillard, the territory of reality no longer precedes the map of representation. Images and signs have become more "real" to us than "reality" itself.

Simulacra and Simulation is very wordy and obtuse, but holds some really interesting ideas about culture and society as a whole. A quick way to explain the topic of the book is by looking at The Matrix (which actually featured this book in one scene and used many of Baudrillard's ideas as a basis for its story).

Sympathetic commentators such as William Merrin, in his book Baudrillard and the Media, have argued that Baudrillard was more concerned with the West's technological and political dominance and the globalization of its commercial interests, and what that means for the present possibility of war. Merrin argued that Baudrillard was not denying that something had happened, but merely questioning whether that something was in fact war or a bilateral "atrocious masquerade as a war."

" Simulacra and Simulation is arguably Baudrillard's most important book. In it he moves from a theory of consumer society governed by a 'code' to a general theory of culture that problematizes 'reality.' His idea of the hyperreal informs most discussions." —Mark Poster, University of California, Irvine
